Year 4 RE student Deborah Cheok had won a grand prize at the 10th English Economic Essay Contest for the International category. This is an annual contest held by The Korea Times (English Version) for university students around the world. The contest was sponsored by Korea's Woori Bank and the grand prize (for international/foreign student category) is a return air ticket from Singapore to Korea.

The topic of her award-winning essay was “How can Korea have Samsung- or Hyundai-like global players in the financial sector?” The winning essay was published on 19 November 2014 to celebrate the 64th Anniversary of The Korea Times, the nation’s oldest English daily.

More information about Deborah’s article and the contest: